The Triumph of the Gods series of four tapestries, from Dumfries House, depict subjects from Greek mythology were made during the 1700s from cartoons exclusive to the workshop of Leyniers-Reyndams in Brussels. The tapestries were designed by the well-known artists of the day, Jan van Orley (1665-1735) and Augustin Coppens (1668 - 1740).

The Procession of Bacchus depicts Bacchus, the God of wine, in his crown of vine leaves, sitting in his triumphal car which is drawn by tigers. Around him maenads sing and dance, a Bacchic ritual. Satyrs are also present, Bacchus was also associated with goat-worship, and behind him is a statue of Pan (himself part goat) playing his pipes.
