The Venus and Adonis set of Brussels tapestries, from the V&A collection, were designed by Jan van Orley, the most famous tapestry artist of the day. They were made circa 1700-20, based on paintings by Francesco Albani, and depict the classic myth of love, lust and rejection between a god and a mortal.

Venus, Adonis and Cupid depicts Venus and Adonis in front the swan chariot. It looks as if Adonis is about to go hunting, and Venus could be warning him to be safe, following her dream.

Venus and Adonis shows Adonis reclining on the lap of Venus, with a couple of Putti in the tree and Cupid by Venus. It appears as if Adonis has returned from a successful hunting trip.
