The Venus & Adonis set of Brussels tapestries, from the V&A collection, were designed by Jan van Orley, the most famous tapestry artist of the day. They were made circa 1700-20, based on paintings by Francesco Albani, and depict the classic myth of love, lust and rejection between a god and a mortal.

Venus Asleep shows Venus resting under a canopy surrounded by putti, possibly dreaming of Adonis. One of the putti plays with an apple, a symbol of love and fertility. Adonis is seen with a dog on a lead, as if about to set off hunting.
